Notes on Authors

Katie Gramich is a Reader in English Literature at Cardiff University. Her research focuses primarily on modern women's writing and the literatures of Wales. Recent publications include a monograph on the Welsh-language novelist, Kate Roberts (University of Wales Press, 2011) and Twentieth Century Women's Writing from Wales: Land, Gender, Belonging (University of Wales Press, 2007).

Martin Johnes is Head of History and Classics at Swansea University. He is the author of Wales since 1939 (Manchester University Press, 2012). His previous books include A History of Sport in Wales (University of Wales Press, 2005) and, with Iain McLean, Aberfan: Government and Disasters (Welsh Academic Press, 2000). He is currently working on a project on the role of history in Welsh culture. His website is www.hanescymru.com

Ronald L. Lewis is Professor Emeritus of History at West Virginia University, and a past president of NAASWCH. His most recent book is Welsh Americans: A History of Assimilation in the Coalfields, 1840-1920 (2008).

Jodie Matthews is Research Fellow with the Academy for British and Irish Studies at the University of Huddersfield. Her postdoctoral research focuses on representations of migrancy in the nineteenth century, having completed a PhD entitled 'Reading the Victorian Gypsy' at the Centre for Critical and Cultural Theory, Cardiff University. Having lived, worked, holidayed and travelled in the country for several years, she maintains strong links with Wales and Welsh culture.